There are many unique qualities to the gardens at Lotusland that make it quite unlike other gardens of its size or history. No present-day visitor to Lotusland can leave without being seduced by the exuberance of the mass plantings of dramatic plants, the juxtaposition of the ordinary with the exotic, the unexpected contrasts when walking from one garden to the next and the use of form and color of plants instead of showy floral displays. The gardens are peppered with colorful, often rare minerals and whimsical statuary and may even be bordered by jewel-like chunks of slag glass.

Madame Ganna Walska wrote an autobiographical account of her life, Always Room at the Top, that she published in 1943 just before settling in Santa Barbara. It catalogs her history, accomplishments, philosophy and emotions up to that point in her life. Unfortunately, she never continued that written narrative, and her life in Santa Barbara is subject to much conjecture. What remains as silent testimony of that imaginative and productive time from the early 1940s until her death in 1984 is the exotic and wonderful garden that she named Lotusland. It may be, though, that we can infer some of her garden design intent by looking to her words in that earlier writing, for in her book she calls herself an “enemy of the average” and further declares that “I have a particular aversion to following the multitude in styles of any kind.”

Madame Walska writes, “The unusual, the exotic, so appealed to me that during the Coronation [of Queen Elizabeth II], I had Suzy from Paris copy for me all the turbans the Oriental Enemy of the Average potentates were wearing at this unique event. I embellished them still further with the wonderful antique collection of Oriental jewelry in my possession.”

For her marriage to Alexander Smith Cochran, she relates that she was “in a mourning state of mind” over her previous husband Dr. Frankel’s death, but “just ordered one Callot [Callot Soers was an established design house in Paris from 1895 until 1937] black velvet evening gown called ‘Venus’ which I wore at the wedding dinner.”

She goes on at length, however, to describe how she altered any article of clothing or jewelry to suit her own tastes. As she put it, “I have always been peculiar about dressing. I have defended my individualism against the standardized fashions of dressmakers. I was following the canvases of the great masters rather than the four-seasonal, necessarily passing moods of the Parisian couturiers who are obliged to change the style as often as possible to force women to buy new clothes.” She even continues with, “Since I did not wear the same gowns or hats as other women—although I had more than dislike for eccentricity—I was looked on as being an eccentric person.”

In her construction of a garden that she hoped “to develop to its maximum capacity into the most outstanding center of horticultural significance and of educational use,” just as she had contracted with the best couturiers of her day, Madame Walska consulted with the best designers that could be found. And just as she customized her clothing, she tailored her gardens to suit her fancy, against their advice at times, too. The cacti in front of the house are but one example. She overruled the protests of Lockwood de Forest, who would have insisted on a more conventional plant palette.

In her operatic career, Madame Walska studiously researched her roles before ever appearing on stage. She writes that before her first appearance as Cio-Cio San in Madame Butterfly, she was “giving much thought to this interpretation. I was reading much about Japan with its liliputian [sic] gardens, bridges and houses. I even had a little Japanese garden on my windowsill in my New York home until I was obliged to take it away as the children from all the neighborhood were gathering about my window. I studied the habits of Japanese men and women, their manners, the way they walk, the way they live every day while Farrère [a French novelist famous for his exotic settings] and Pierre Loti [also a French novelist who wrote Madame Chrysanthème, a novel of Japanese manners] provided me with the atmosphere of their homes and

Director’s Letter

Of all the benefits for a member of Ganna Walska Lotusland, the ability to stroll through the gardens—on your own—seems to be the most precious benefit of all. In my mind, there is nothing better than the chance to linger in one garden room alone or with close friends and take in the special beauty of a favorite space, quietly listening to nature’s sounds and perhaps catching the fragrance of some ephemeral bloom.

You may have a different concept of the perfect visit to Lotusland, and we hope you take full advantage of the benefits your membership provides to have many extraordinary experiences in Madame Walska’s enchanting gardens.

Some of you have expressed some confusion about your Lotusland membership benefits. We have heard you and are giving serious consideration to changes in the membership program that will make it easier for you to use your benefits. But before we do, we would like to hear from all of you.

You recently received our request to respond to a Lotusland membership survey, either electronically or by regular mail. I hope you will take the few minutes needed to fill out the survey and return it to us.

We would like to know what you think about Lotusland’s membership program: how you use your benefits, which benefits mean the most to you, why you are a member and what we can do to improve membership benefits and our membership service. Your response will be very important in helping us create an enhanced membership program for you. While there are many reasons to be a member, we hope your primary reason is to sustain the remarkable, magical, historical place that is Lotusland.

We are looking forward to hearing from you.

Warmest regards,
Gwen L. Stauffer

NEW TO THE COLLECTIONS

Eugenias

While many of the plants at Lotusland are rare and exotic, there are some exceptions. And even though Madame Walska loved to plant her specimens in large numbers, such as the hundreds of golden barrel cacti, a few species of more common plants are planted in even larger numbers. These are the sturdy shrubs that make up the hedges throughout the property, creating walls for many of the garden rooms. Occasionally, even these tough plants need to be replaced for one reason or another. A recent planting of Syzygium paniculatum, commonly called eugenia, in the parterre is one example.

The tall hedges flanking the decorative pottery plate behind the Neptune fountain are nicely symmetrical on that side. On the “back” side, however, they were thicker in one direction than the other. As the background for the roses on that side of the terrace, the effect was a little jarring. In addition, the closeness of the very thick portion to the roses themselves made maintenance difficult and reduced the necessary flow of air to keep the roses healthy. The hedge was also composed of a mixture of Syzygium and Pittosporum undulatum. To correct all these conundrums, the hedge was removed on that side and new plants installed in line with the other side.

If left untouched, eugenia would eventually grow to become a very large tree; one old specimen at Stow House in Goleta is more than 90 feet tall. With continual shearing, however, it can be maintained as a handsome hedge. New growth emerges as a reddish bronze and matures to glossy deep green.

In the late 1980s, a damaging insect pest was introduced to the area that marred the appearance of many eugenia hedges. By 1991, a natural predator was found and introduced. As the predator insect populations grew, a balance was established and now, with consistent care, eugenia hedges can again grace the landscape. In just a short time, our new plants will fill out and complete the more perfectly ordered composition.

Kisa Heyer Named Lifetime Honorary Trustee at Annual Meeting

At its 2010 Annual Meeting, Lotusland honored Kisa Heyer by electing her a Lifetime Honorary Trustee. This action recognizes Kisa’s outstanding service to Lotusland during the eight years that she was a member of its Board. She served as President for two years and at various times during her tenure, she chaired the Development and Lotusland Celebrates Committees and served on many others.

As impressive as this sounds, it does not begin to describe the energy and commitment that were evident throughout her years of service. Kisa went well beyond fulfilling her duties as a Trustee and Board President. During her tenure as President, Lotusland found itself without an Executive Director. Kisa was a calm, smart and dedicated leader during this transition period. She either served on or kept in touch with every committee. Kisa’s hard work and devotion brought Lotusland through a challenging time.

Lotusland is grateful for the service Kisa so generously gave and is pleased that she will join Merryl Brown, Robert Emmons, Arthur Gaudi, Anne Jones, Michael Towbes and Carol Valentine as a Lifetime Honorary Trustee.

New board officers were introduced at the Annual Meeting. They are Larry Durham, President; Marianne Sprague, Vice President; Ian Fisher, Secretary and Michael Mayfield, Treasurer. Nominating and Governance Chair Jill Levinson thanked the energetic and generous Trustees whose terms have ended: Jane Copelan, Linda Gluck, Kisa Heyer, Harry Kolb, Sandi Nicholson, Brett Posten, Barbara Siemon, Cynthia Spivey and Nancy Wood. Some will remain active on committees, and we know that all will continue to be a part of Lotusland.

Treasurer Michael Mayfield gave a financial report, Executive Director Gwen Stauffer gave a State of the Garden address and Curator Virginia Hayes presented a program highlighting Lotusland’s 2009 accomplishments. Refreshments followed in the pavilion.
Bob Emmons has always been interested in gardens, and being the gardener in his family, he always seems to have a garden project going. He may not have known how big a project he was getting into when one evening, during a social gathering at his home, Carol Valentine and Anne Jones, two matriarchs of Lotusland’s founding board, cloistered Bob in his own library. Carol spoke frankly, “Now Bob, I want you to be on the board for Lotusland, and I won’t let you out of this room until you say yes.” Bob consented, and a new era for Lotusland began.

Bob joined the Board in 1997 and was elected President two years later in 1999. By the next year, he was leading Lotusland in its first strategic planning process. Along with Arthur Gaudi, another founding Trustee and Madame Ganna Walska’s estate lawyer, Bob believed it was critical to have a plan for generating financial support to ensure Lotusland’s long-term future. Together, they created The Lotus Society, which received gifts and pledges in excess of $100,000 in its first year.

Bob told me that at the time, he thought his goal of 50 members to The Lotus Society in 10 years was ambitious. Now, on the 10th anniversary of The Lotus Society, our members exceed 100, and today The Lotus Society Fund is responsible for more than $2.5 million in gifts and bequests.

Bob explained, “When we created The Lotus Society endowment fund, it was our intention to guarantee the long-term health of Lotusland. The endowment needs to be of a size that will transit Lotusland through the years, no matter the economic condition.” Bob added, “We created The Lotus Society with an initial entry level so that it is painless for anyone to participate.”

Bob believes the success of the program is a great tribute to the Lotusland patrons who understand the value of The Lotus Society in ensuring the success of Lotusland for years to come. Bob told me, “I am especially excited that members of The Lotus Society have added to their initial gifts over time, and it is pleasing to see them recognized on the Wall of Honor.”

When I asked Bob and his wife Chris what gardens of Lotusland were most inspiring to them, Bob said the Japanese garden has always touched him. But, Bob told me, the topiary garden and the cactus garden are his favorite garden projects made possible by the fund-raising efforts of his friends and board colleagues Carol Valentine and Mike Towbes during his time as Board President.

In the end, Bob and Chris agreed that the great lawn holds special significance for them. “I feel at home on the lawn,” Chris explained. “We have 20 years of memories there—memories of all the past Members’ Family Days, Lotusland Celebrates, LotusFest and musical programs.” Bob and Chris look forward to making more memories at Lotusland.

Chris and Bob hosted the very first Annual Lotus Society Recognition Luncheon at their home and are delighted that they are doing so again on June 6 in celebration of the 10th anniversary of the program.

Replanting Lotuses

Lotuses and Crayfish in the Japanese Garden Pond

In the late 1800s, Ralph Kinton Stevens built what is now the Japanese garden pond as a reservoir for his nursery. He planted Indian lotuses, which eventually filled the pond. Later, crayfish were introduced to the pond presumably as a tasty treat for a hungry gardener. Over time, the crayfish decimated the lotuses, one of their favorite foods, and catfish were employed to reduce the crayfish population. An ecological balance eventually resulted in many years of happy coexistence among lotuses, water lilies, crayfish, catfish, koi, turtles and birds.

Stevens built the pond in the best place to capture runoff from winter rainstorms. But this also meant sediment built up over the past 100 years, which resulted in the need for its removal in 2007. The pond was drained, and water lilies and koi were temporarily relocated while a crew removed several feet of silt using wheelbarrows and shovels. Unfortunately, the ecological balance was lost although the Procambarus clarkii (Red Swamp Crayfish) survived as they are able to tolerate dry spells of up to four months.

After the pond was refilled and the lotuses that were never removed from the pond began to grow, the crayfish emerged to eat all the new growing tips of lotus tubers. Several measures were used to restore the lost ecological balance. Young catfish were introduced to the pond and are growing. An aeration system was installed in 2009. The water lilies overwintered in the pond and emerged early this spring. Staff began a trapping program and removed more than a thousand crayfish from the pond in 2009. We started trapping again this spring and purchased lotuses, Nelumbo nucifera ssp. nucifera, that were planted in pots (to be removed later) in the pond. The new growth is protected from the crayfish to give the lotuses a chance to establish a foothold.

Overall pond health is improving. Water hyacinths provide an ideal breeding habitat for the crayfish and will not be grown in any of Lotusland’s ponds in 2010. Trapping crayfish will continue to be a focus. We’re optimistic that the lotuses will once again flourish in the Japanese pond!

Lotuses in the Water Garden

This spring new cultivars of lotus were planted in the lotus pond that was divided into eight segments in 2004. Overgrown and underperforming cultivars were replaced with Nelumbo nucifera ssp. lutea, N. ‘Chawan Basu’ and N. ‘Alba Grandiflora.’ Another cultivar, N. ‘Momo Botan,’ was planted in a box in the hardy water lily pond. Victoria amazonica (giant water lily) planted from seed will also be growing in the hardy lily pond this year. Trapping of crayfish that migrated from the Japanese pond to the lily and lotus ponds is ongoing.

MADAME EMPLOYED those rules of landscaping which she felt were safe and unshakeable. They tended towards the geometric rules more popular in European formal gardens. Lotusland was not that kind of a formal garden and the combination of techniques was jarring and outlandish, but it was what in part gave Lotusland its unique and charmingly eccentric quality. By these gardening rules or principles, I mean, for instance, that she considered unassailable the principle that things go from smaller to bigger, from short to tall; smaller in the front and at one or both ends and taller in the back. So, in effect, you would get rows and formal arrangements intermixed with very naturalistic or free form plantings, a strange combination of styles that is pure, typical, unadulterated Lotusland! She also liked borders, and felt they too were “safe,” that is not subject to ridicule. So she would tend to add borders to any garden area, and then she would often add another border around the border, and sometimes yet another border around the border of the border.

These techniques were most in evidence along the main drive just inside the front gate. The drive was lined with towering eucalyptus trees. In front of these trees she planted rows of arborescent aloes, then in front of the aloes she planted rows of hundreds of Agave attenuate, shorter than the aloes. In front of these she had planted a border of low sedum. Each of these borders made the drive proper narrower and narrower until there was hardly room for two wheelbarrows to pass, let alone a vehicle. The effect was impressive, however, but the plants were suffering: from oak root fungus, from nematodes and from improper irrigation. We suggested building a berm of looser, more porous soil for the Agave attenuate plants so that their feet would not “stay so wet.” This meant removing every single plant in this area and cutting off the roots, taking fresh cuttings, rooting the new cuttings and replacing them in the new soil. We took advantage of the situation to sneak the borders of the drive back a bit each day, widening it to where a truck or vehicle could again pass. I would catch Mme. Walska eyeing the drive suspiciously, suspecting there was something different but not quite being able to place it. She tended to like the effect so she didn’t say anything, but she was clearly puzzled and oblivious to the fact that the drive ended up two to three times wider than it had been.

We covered the widened drive with gravel, even though it was back to the original width, for in planting the borders in front of the borders she had actually had the gardeners break holes with long bars into the drive pavement in order to plant the plants. The remarkable thing about her landscaping of the agaves in this area is that she had personally supervised the original placement and planting of each of the several hundred agaves, checking to see that each was oriented so that its best aspect would be directed at visitors who would walk up the main path when the gates were opened for garden tours, the only time these big gates were ever used.

As the youngest in a Navy family of five, Pat Sheppard spent her early life living all over the United States from Memphis, Tennessee to Swarthmore, Pennsylvania to Key West, Florida to San Diego, California to name a few. Pat attended Whittier College, inspired by the founding Quakers and their philosophy, as Pat expresses it, “that women are just as good as anybody.” The college was also attractive because it offered a study abroad program in Scandinavia. So she headed off to spend half of her sophomore year in Scandinavia with several European side trips including one to Rome to “warm up.”

After college, the lure of distant destinations and a call for duty inspired Pat and her husband to sign up for the Peace Corps. They were stationed in The Philippines in Tuguegarao, Cagayan. After that adventure, they moved to Santa Barbara in 1975.

Pat’s introduction to Lotusland came while she worked at UCSB. She was part of the staff who reported to then Executive Vice Chancellor Don Crawford. Don happened to be married to Lotusland volunteer Sharon Crawford, who was completing her book Ganna Walska Lotusland: The Garden and its Creators. When Don asked if any on his staff would like a tour of Madame’s garden, years later, Pat and Ernie took on the project that “is my pride and joy.” They received permission from their condominium board to remove an asphalt parking area and turn it into a garden. The work was arduous—roto-tilling, carting, composting and planting—but asphalt has been replaced with a garden filled with plants in hues of purple, blue and pink. Echium and tulip trees enhance her neighbors’ views. “Gardens are good for the soul,” says Pat about her “parking lot garden” eight years later.

After retiring from UCSB in 2008, Pat is taking up the piano again after a hiatus of many years. Her volunteer activities include Soroptimist, CAMA, the Pearl Chase Society, the American Heart Association and, in between giving tours at Lotusland, she’s enjoying the docent training at Casa del Herrero and can hardly wait for the September docent training at The Historical Society to begin!

Pat most enjoys spending time with her children and their families, and she shares a healthy sense of humor with her husband, who writes the humor column, “Ernie’s World,” for The Montecito Journal. Travel is still an important part of her life, and she’s busy planning a trip to France with her daughter Christy and her granddaughter Leila.

Pat highly recommends experiencing the many ways to volunteer at Lotusland. “I’ve enjoyed being a tour facilitator, a mentor and evaluator for docents in training, a member, an Outreach docent for fourth graders and helping at a variety of events. Now, I want to learn from and help the garden staff.” This from someone who “didn’t even know there were such things as cycads or euphorbia when I took docent training back in 2000!”

Next time you’re at Lotusland, you’re sure to find Pat enjoying herself in one of her many volunteer roles.

Pat completed an MA in history while working at UCSB, and it was Pat that met her current husband, Ernie Witham. Of her career at UCSB, Pat says: “You feel as if you’re part of something important when you work at an excellent educational institution like UCSB.”

Transforming unappealing spaces may be a calling—her father once transformed the bar area of their San Diego home into an indoor orchid greenhouse. Years later, Pat and Ernie took on the project that “is my pride and joy.” They received permission from their condominium board to remove an asphalt parking area and turn it into a garden. The work was arduous—roto-tilling, carting, composting and planting—but asphalt has been replaced with a garden filled with plants in hues of purple, blue and pink. A wonderful experience. I especially love giving tours to people who are first-time visitors, sharing the stories, the history. People are always amazed at the gardens, the beauty of the plants and the sustainable methods that maintain such healthy collections. The visitors’ eyes light up. It’s great!”

Pat completed an MA in history while working at UCSB, and it was Pat that met her current husband, Ernie Witham. Of her career at UCSB, Pat says: “You feel as if you’re part of something important when you work at an excellent educational institution like UCSB.”

Transforming unappealing spaces may be a calling—her father once transformed the bar area of their San Diego home into an indoor orchid greenhouse. Years later, Pat and Ernie took on the project that “is my pride and joy.” They received permission from their condominium board to remove an asphalt parking area and turn it into a garden. The work was arduous—roto-tilling, carting, composting and planting—but asphalt has been replaced with a garden filled with plants in hues of purple, blue and pink. Echium and tulip trees enhance her neighbors’ views. “Gardens are good for the soul,” says Pat about her “parking lot garden” eight years later.

After retiring from UCSB in 2008, Pat is taking up the piano again after a hiatus of many years. Her volunteer activities include Soroptimist, CAMA, the Pearl Chase Society, the American Heart Association and, in between giving tours at Lotusland, she’s enjoying the docent training at Casa del Herrero and can hardly wait for the September docent training at The Historical Society to begin!

Pat most enjoys spending time with her children and their families, and she shares a healthy sense of humor with her husband, who writes the humor column, “Ernie’s World,” for The Montecito Journal. Travel is still an important part of her life, and she’s busy planning a trip to France with her daughter Christy and her granddaughter Leila.

Pat highly recommends experiencing the many ways to volunteer at Lotusland. “I’ve enjoyed being a tour facilitator, a mentor and evaluator for docents in training, a member, an Outreach docent for fourth graders and helping at a variety of events. Now, I want to learn from and help the garden staff.” This from someone who “didn’t even know there were such things as cycads or euphorbia when I took docent training back in 2000!”

Next time you’re at Lotusland, you’re sure to find Pat enjoying herself in one of her many volunteer roles.

Volunteer Profile: Pat Sheppard
OUR PERIPATETIC VOLUNTEER

As the youngest in a Navy family of five, Pat Sheppard spent her early life living all over the United States from Memphis, Tennessee to Swarthmore, Pennsylvania to Key West, Florida to San Diego, California to name a few. Pat attended Whittier College, inspired by the founding Quakers and their philosophy, as Pat expresses it, “that women are just as good as anybody.” The college was also attractive because it offered a study abroad program in Copenhagen. So she headed off to spend half of her sophomore year in Scandinavia with several European side trips including one to Rome to “warm up.”

After college, the lure of distant destinations and a call for duty inspired Pat and her husband to sign up for the Peace Corps. They were stationed in The Philippines in Tuguegarao, Cagayan. After that adventure, they moved to Santa Barbara in 1975.

Pat’s introduction to Lotusland came while she worked at UCSB. She was part of the staff who reported to then Executive Vice Chancellor Don Crawford. Don happened to be married to Lotusland volunteer Sharon Crawford, who was completing her book Ganna Walska Lotusland: The Garden and its Creators. When Don asked if any on his staff would like a tour of Madame’s garden, Pat gave an enthusiastic “yes!” and enjoyed Sharon’s tour thoroughly. Inspired by that visit, Pat became a member of the Docent Class of 2001.

“I loved everything about the docent training—the history of the early nurserymen, Madame’s energy and vision, the concept of sustainability. I found that coming to the garden for classes and later to give tours was, and is, a
